

Are you planning on selling Cheesus???

over the past few years many people have suggested that we sell cheesus on ebay, especially after the grilled cheese virgin mary sold for a lot of money (28,000) I do figure that Jesus is way higher on the food chain than the virgin mary so who knows how high Cheesus might go for.

so far, Cheesus is still sitting on my bookshelf in my office. I am thinking of a more public display here at the church but do not have plans to sell him.

I must admit that if I thought we could raise money for missions and raise awareness for God's kingdom I would consider selling it.

our youth group has become deeply involved in the genocide in darfur. we have had two benefits in the past fifteen months raising money and trying to generate interest and awareness. we set up a darfur experience with images, sounds, and video for our youth to walk through and see what it is like in darfur. we have sold and handed out over five hundred darfur t-shirts for kids to wear and share what is happening over there. we did an event to focus on China and their relationship with darfur with hopes that the Olympic focus would encourage china to exert influence on sudan. at the end of april we will host one of the lost boys of sudan who wrote the book "what is the what" to share his story with our youth.

I tell you this to say that if I thought I could sell cheesus for an unreasonable amount to do something reasonable in the world, I would do it. it is fun to have it and show it to new people, but pictures do it as well.

so I guess the answer to your question is I do not have plans to sell it but might if I could use the money for missions.
